THE LINK PUBLICATION SOCIETY INC.

CONTENT COPYRIGHT POLICY

Revised December 2014

By contributing to The Link you agree to create and supply content and The Link agrees to use it according to the following terms:

- 1. You retain copyright ownership of the material you produce and you retain all print and electronic rights under the conditions of this agreement. You are the only person capable of granting permission to re-publish material in situations not covered under this agreement.
- 2. The Link may publish your material in print as well as on its website. Once published by The Link, the material may also be reproduced.
- 3. You grant The Link a non-exclusive license to reproduce your material in print and/or electronically as part of our archives.
- 4. If any, remuneration will revert to you whenever possible. Should you be unreachable, the money will go to ventures that benefit all contributors and members of The Link.
- 5. At all times proper creator attribution will be maintained. You may not publish your material (in part or in whole) elsewhere on the same day as The Link or before The Link publishes first unless otherwise agreed.
- 6. Regarding clause five above, a series of shots from the same photo or video assignment constitute the "material," therefore once shots from a given assignment are used, the provisions apply to all the shots from the assignment, used and unused alike.
- 7. You promise that all material you supply to The Link will be original unless the parties involved otherwise agree, and that publication by The Link of the material will not violate any third party's copyright interests.
- 8. The Link may edit all material for publication, in accordance with the moral rights of the author, as defined by the Canadian Copyright Act.
- 9. Before publication, either party may terminate this agreement at any time, by notice in writing. Termination will not affect any rights granted hereunder over material submitted prior to said termination.